

AGENDA FOR GOOD GOVERNANCE

The government cannot shed its responsibility for providing certain facilities and responsibilities to the under-privileged. The political forces should basically represent the under-privileged for a better future and attention.

The poor people all over the world should strive for a system where a set of policies is farmed that meant a lot for the man on the street.

Wherever the common man is allowed a say by the political system, a more vibrant system prevails.

The private sector works on the promises of profit maximization. It does not have the capacity to deliver according to the needs of the common man. We should struggle to find the right balance between a pro-free market and corporate sector or a pro-people approach.
